

Every day looking up at them in the stars, the lights and the planes it's good
We all can see it and it's been so good but it can't be like this for long:
It won't be like this tomorrow

It couldn't be like this next week or next month and it's never been like this in the sky, the blue sky and the sun and the light and the light on the clouds and how they move

I'm not sure what it is now but it feels like the best for some time and given all that it is about with how things are (and the rest) and of course not without the clouds, the lights, the stars, and the planes in the sky and how they are now but every day I look up at the sky

There was that one day with the sun shining under the clouds, pouring in glossy, bright, new light between the trees and the overcast sky
I only saw it for a moment and it's like every other time
It's not like it has never happened before

I've never seen anything like it and it's not like I don't look up Looking at the sky and the sun and the clouds but I've never seen anything like it

The other explanation is it's the clouds and what's around them, below them and behind them, the other things being blue sky, planes, stars, air, birds, sun, earth, dirt, other things like that that we all know about
The clouds seem most obvious, the sky is also always being appreciated and noticed, the sunset is very good, always

And we were walking and one side it was the blue sky, maybe a few clouds but the clear blue sky, and the sun coming in, warming our backs Then looking the other way there were other clouds carrying dark light underneath and then way up there the clouds were gray, dense, and high in the background

And we yelled at the planes to stop and stay for awhile like the clouds and how they look
We know they move on without considering us even a little It's not just me, other people are like this too with the clouds being the way they are

I hear them often (over and over!!) say things like "The clouds have been so good lately"
"Everyday I look up at the sky, the clouds, they look so nice"
"Did you see them, the clouds?"
"Has it always been this good?"
"Look at that big one"
"Has it always been like this in the sky with the clouds?"
"It didn't used to be like this"
"Did you notice it tonight, the sky?"
"I can't believe the clouds right now"

Maybe it's something else that has us look up at the clouds and the way they all are, nothing special of course, but it's only the clouds and the way they look
From the earth we see the sky, the clouds in the air, and above or after that the clouds move on, like we've mentioned before

It might be in the air or the transition from the air to the sky then (and?) the clouds
From where we are to where we see the earth, the air, the sky, there are differences where they're placed
The clouds are there!

No one knew it and it felt like forever to ask for my own good
It's good to know we've all been looking (and wondering why) and eventually we will stop
We love to look at (what I'm thinking now is) the new sky, the new clouds, and the light on the new clouds
We've all sat there for so long, touched by the light, but now it's a bit different and I'm not sure why or how long it will be with the sun and the sky and the air and the planes with the clouds and how they all are now

And there we were again but watching the birds now flying against the blue sky
Flickering white and black and left and right and the sky and the sun and the snow and down to the earth now stilled by the blanket of the clear blue sky
It couldn't have been any other way and the clouds stayed and the blue sky and the air were just right and there for so long

The other day too
The clouds stacked in dense, immovable rows
One was orange (stealing the sunset!) and the other pale gray
I can't remember if it was good to us or not but I know we talked about it
The clouds sat there in the sky too for so long, one touched by the sunset and one just behind

Let's do it together:
Looking at the sun, "Over there the clouds!", and it would continue on like this "The trees against the overcast sky!"
What next? It's hard to think it would go on and be good
It's not like it has never happened before
"I see it over there."
"Look!"
"There it goes" and how does it pass through the sky and the sun and the clouds and travel after where we see it

Maybe it's always been like this but now we are all wondering when it won't be so nice and I wonder when it won't be so nice if this is the best and then tomorrow or next week or next month or next year will never be like this and the clouds, the lights, the stars, and the planes in the sky aren't anything like they were and there's nothing to talk about regarding the sky